This broad introduction to museums benefits all educators who teach introductory museum studies, addressing the discipline from a holistic, dynamic, and document-centered perspective. • Frames museum studies within an information context and specifically addresses the interests and concerns of librarians • Benefits all educators who teach introductory museum studies, addressing the discipline from a holistic, dynamic, and document-centered perspective • Highlights how museums are embedded in a larger cultural complex that includes libraries, archives, and other information institutions

"It is well-written, concise, well-structured, and a good introduction to the topic." - Systematic Biology "This is a terrific work and I'm so impressed with the amount of thought and hard work that is evidenced here. There is absolutely nothing else like this and it fills a real need for those of us who teach museum studies. I've relied on multiple authored readers and course packs of articles in the past and none of those have been entirely satisfactory. This is 'thoroughly composed' as it were?planned out from beginning to end?and is a big improvement over anything else available for teaching." (Brad Taylor, Associate Director; Museum Studies Program, University of Michigan) About the Author Kiersten F. Latham is assistant professor in the School of Library and Information Science at Kent State University, Kent, OH, where she has developed the museum studies specialization within the MLIS program. John E. Simmons is an international museum consultant and lecturer who has worked in museums for more than 40 years.
